

More Traditional Structure

- More hierarchical
- Staff and management split strictly according to service lines
- The more services, the more internal case managers needed
- Caseload sizes here are based more on best practices (reality may look different)
- Admn specific to service lines
- Requires strategic collaboration and coordination across services
- Can include redundancies if people receive multiple services

*this depends on many factors, including skill and experience as well as what services this role is providing

Holistic Community Support Teams

- Geographically based (or based on other criteria)
- About 35-40ish people on each team
- A person doesn't need to switch teams if they add/remove a service, or if they want to work
- Staff support people (not services)
- Looks at whole person and supports people of working age on a path to employment
- "Specialized" Employment Staff (Manager, Developers, etc.) can 'drop' in to multiple teams depending on number of people with employment goals
- Number of teams are based on number of people supported

Example "Flow of Services"

