Person-Centered Practice and CBDS

“This program of supports is designed to enable an individual to enrich his or her life and enjoy a full range of community activities by providing opportunities for developing, enhancing, and maintaining competency in personal, social and community activities” (MA DDS)

“The design of a CBDS service, the types of activities it facilitates, and the way individuals spend their time within CBDS should be based first and foremost on a thoughtful, person-centered planning process, that identifies an individual’s preferences and interests.”

Building your Toolbox: Charting the LifeCourse

Core Belief:

- All people have the right to live, love, work, play, and pursue their own life aspirations

Key Principles:

- Focusing on All
- Recognizing the Person within context of their family
- Trajectory of Life Experiences
- Achieving Life Outcomes

Person-Centered Planning

- Evidence-based practice
- Flexible set of approaches, tools and principles used for life planning
- Used in determining, planning for, and working towards what an individual wants
- Putting person-centered thinking into practice:
 - Flexible
 - Strength-based vs Deficit-based
 - Person-centered vs Program-centered
 - Planning is ongoing
