Inclusive post-secondary education provides opportunities for students with intellectual disabilities to access higher education. This education prepares them to live increasingly independent lives and pursue careers of their choice.

Students who completed a model demonstration inclusive postsecondary education program last year had a 59% employment rate upon graduation (Grigal et al., 2023), that's nearly three times the employment rate for transition-age youth with cognitive disability and adults with developmental disabilities in general (National Core Indicators, 2019; Windsor et al., 2021).
