

Plain Language Talking Points EDUCATION

WHAT IS THE PROBLEM?

- » Not enough inclusive college programs exist so that everyone who wants to can go to college – some states have none and most states do not have enough.
- » The federal government does not give states enough money to provide the services and supports students need to succeed in school.
- » More money is needed to train and hire good special education teachers.
- » Students with disabilities can be hurt at school by being put in rooms with locked doors (seclusion) or physically held down (restraint). There is no federal law to stop this.

WHY IT MATTERS TO ME:

- » I am a student with disabilities and receive support and services in college.
- » I think my friends with intellectual disabilities who want to go to college, should be able to go like I do.

WHAT CAN CONGRESS DO?

- » Congress can provide more money for inclusive college programs like mine so all students with intellectual disabilities who want to can go to college. These programs should be in all states and at different kinds of colleges—community colleges, 2 year, 4 year and other places.
- » Congress should support special education by increasing funding and resources.
- » Congress should make it easier for students with disabilities to go to college and get the services and supports that they need.
- » Congress should protect students from getting hurt in schools, like through seclusion and restraint.
