What are regional and state postsecondary education alliances?

What does that mean for me?

Regional alliances promote access to quality higher education for students with intellectual disability in their geographic region through a shared focus on collaboration through program development, research, and public policy. A region consists of two or more neighboring states that may have similar demographic or political characteristics.

Like regional alliances, state alliances form with a shared mission to help build community and momentum for inclusive postsecondary education in the same state. At a minimum, an alliance can be a group of representatives from college programs for students with intellectual disability. They can also include representatives from key state agencies, organizations, parents, alumni, and students. State alliances connect state agencies and state-level constituents, create a learning community, offer more accessible professional development opportunities, and provide shared funding opportunities.
